To Whom It May Concern,

I am pleased to recommend Mr. Nomaan Munshi, who participated in the challenge “From Concept to Venture – Be or Not to Be in ESG Reports.”

During the challenge, Mr. Munshi demonstrated strong engagement, creativity, and openness to developing innovative ideas in the fields of entrepreneurship, sustainability, and ESG reporting. He showed the ability to think critically, approach complex topics with curiosity, and transform initial concepts into meaningful and practical venture-oriented ideas.

Mr. Munshi made a valuable contribution to the development and refinement of his team’s project idea. He actively participated in brainstorming sessions, shared thoughtful suggestions, and helped the team connect its concept with the wider themes of sustainability and responsible business. His involvement supported the team in moving from an initial idea toward a clearer, more structured, and realistic proposal.

He also demonstrated strong teamwork and communication skills. He listened carefully to the perspectives of other participants, contributed constructively to group discussions, and worked collaboratively to find solutions when the team encountered challenges. His positive attitude and willingness to consider different viewpoints helped create an effective and supportive working environment.

In addition, Mr. Munshi contributed to preparing and presenting the team’s final concept. He helped organise the key ideas and communicate them in a clear and engaging manner. His ability to explain the project confidently demonstrated both a good understanding of the subject and a willingness to take responsibility for the team’s work.

What particularly stood out was his creative approach to problem-solving, his openness to exploring new perspectives, and his ability to connect business thinking with social and environmental responsibility. The challenge required not only knowledge and analytical skills, but also imagination, teamwork, communication, and the confidence to present original solutions.

Mr. Munshi proved that young people can bring fresh energy, valuable insights, and ambitious ideas to important discussions about the future of business and sustainability. His involvement reflected a positive attitude toward learning, collaboration, and responsible innovation.

I believe that his participation in this challenge is a valuable achievement and a strong indication of his potential for further academic, professional, and personal development. The skills he demonstrated—including creativity, collaboration, problem-solving, communication, and initiative—would make him a valuable candidate for future internships, academic programmes, and other development opportunities.

I am happy to recommend Mr. Nomaan Munshi as a motivated, creative, collaborative, and forward-thinking young individual. I am confident that he will continue to approach future projects and challenges with curiosity, commitment, and a strong sense of responsibility.

Sincerely,

Sylwia Mikołajczyk
